THE TEMPLE OF DERR

BY AYLWARD M. BLACKMAN M. A.

LAYCOCK STUDENT OF EGYPTOLOGY AT WORCESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD

LATE OXFORD UNIVERSITY NUBIAN RESEARCH SCHOLAR

FORMERLY SCHOLAR OF QUEEN'S COLLEGE.

PREFACE.

This record of the Temple of Derr was made during the months of January, February, and March 1910. The difficulty of obtaining satisfactory photographs of the reliefs in the inner rooms (see pp. 24, 42 and 74) was great. Those published are the fruits of considerable labour — I was single handed — and of an experience gained after many failures. Early in the season I met with an accident in which a leg was badly injured. By this untoward event, I was effectually prevented from climbing the rocks to search for graffiti, a most regrettable omission in view of the fine collection of rock-inscriptions made by Dr Røder⁽¹⁾ in the district where he worked for this same series of memoirs.

My best thanks are due to Miss B. Porter⁽²⁾, who once more furnished me with all the bibliographical particulars, and to Professor Breasted, who kindly read over the proof-sheets, and collated my copies of the inscriptions with his own. To him I am indebted for many useful suggestions, while his critical and experienced eye detected more than one error in my versions of the hieroglyphic texts. These friendly offices will have greatly enhanced any value that this publication may possess.

THE TEMPLE OF DERR.

PART I.

INTRODUCTION AND TEXT.

Derr, called ed-Dirr by the inhabitants, is situated on the east bank of the river about 120 miles south of Shellâl. It is by far the largest township in Lower Nubia and, before the conquest of that country by Mohammed Aly, was a place of importance, being the seat of the Kâshif, or native ruler, who held sway over the territory that lies between Shellâl and Halfa. The Kâshif's palace, a large building of crude brick, is still standing, and, though somewhat ruinous in parts, is even now occupied by his descendants. This palace and the mosque adjoining it are well worth visiting. In the latter are some old Arabic inscriptions engraved on slabs of alabaster inserted in the walls. Derr is still the administrative centre of Lower Nubia, and its white government offices standing on the river bank, with the minaret of the Kâshif's mosque rising above them — all set in the midst of extensive palm-groves, — never fail to attract the eye of the passing traveller as he speeds Halfa-wards on the express steamer.

Just above Derr, the Nile makes an immense bend⁽¹⁾ and flows almost due south till it reaches Korosko⁽²⁾. In the description of the temple this fact, for the sake of convenience, has been ignored and the walls referred to as though the axis of the temple lay east and west. This is only following the example of the Egyptians themselves, who always assumed the river to run north, and orientated their temples and tombs accordingly.

All that now remains of the temple of Derr, which lies some way back from the river behind the town, consists of two pillared halls, a sanctuary, and two side-chapels (see Pl. I). These, with the exception of parts of the first hall, are entirely excavated in the rather low cliff that marks the commencement of the high desert.

(1) This must be  "the eastern bend", alluded to in an inscription in Penné's tomb at Anibeh, L., D., III, 229, c. Perhaps also  (SETHE, Urkunden, IV, 8) is a name for this part of the river.

(2) S. S. E.

There may originally have been an open court and pylon in front of these chambers, but no trace whatever now remains of any such constructions. Though all the walls and pillars of the first hall were probably rock-hewn, masonry seems to have been used for the roofing as far as the third row of pillars (see the remarks on p. 4), in the architraves of which grooves have been cut to receive the ends of the stone beams (see Pl. II). This is the only surviving trace of masonry.

The temple is entirely the work of Ramses II who named it «House-of-Merimamon-Ramses-in-the-House-of-Re» or «Temple-of-Merimamon-Ramses-in-the-House-of-Re»⁽¹⁾, and dedicated it to Re the sun-god⁽²⁾. But as was the case at Soleb⁽³⁾ and Serreh⁽⁴⁾ the statue of the royal founder was also worshipped here, and this cult figures largely in the scenes sculptured on the walls⁽⁵⁾.

We know nothing of the temple's subsequent history, and there is no mention of it in any inscription, except that in the tomb of Penné at Anibeh⁽⁶⁾ «Ramses-Merimamon-in-the-House-of-Re, the town, over against the House-of-Re», is said to form the northern boundary of certain lands with which a statue of Ramses VI, that had been set up by Penné in the temple at Anibeh (Miam⁽⁷⁾), was endowed.

⁽⁴⁾ BREASTED, op. cit., III, § 502. There were probably also similar cultus-statues of Ramses at Abu Simbel (see L., D., III, 188, a, 189, e, and 191, h and k), Gerf Husein (see WEIGALL, Antiquities of Lower Nubia, p. 82; L., D., III, 178, e), and Wady es-Sabûc (see BREASTED, op. cit., III, § 505; L., D., III, 182, c). Cf. also the statue of Ramses VI in Anibeh temple referred to below.

⁽⁵⁾ i. e. in the sanctuary : north wall : scene I; northern side-chapel : south wall : scene III; southern side-chapel : east wall : scenes I and II; first pillared hall : east wall : scene IV; second pillared hall : north wall : scene I, and south wall : scene II. These two last mentioned scenes represent a boat-shrine being carried on the shoulders of priests. It is called «Boat-shrine of Merimamon-Ramses in the house of Re», and evidently, in view of the epithet «in the boat-shrine in the house of Re» which follows the name Merimamon-Ramses in the scenes quoted from the two side-chapels (p. 81 and 86), it must be supposed to contain a cultus-image of Ramses hidden from sight by the covering veil (cf. a scene from Wady es-Sabûc in L., D., III, 180, a, depicting a similar «boat-shrine of Ramses»). We probably have an actual representation of one of these cultus-images in the figure that stands astern of the sacred barque in the sanctuary : north wall : scene I (Pl. LX and see p. 92-94). For the index of the deified Ramses' names see p. 120.

⁽⁷⁾ For this identification see WEIGALL, Antiquities of Lower Nubia, p. 116. Breasted (Records, IV, § 475) incorrectly identifies Miam with Derr and assumes that the statue was erected in Ramses II's temple there. It must have been enshrined in the temple, probably that of the local Horus, at Anibeh, of which there are still visible remains within the town walls.

All the reliefs in the temple are en creux, and, except for those on the walls and some of the pillars of the first hall, are very coarsely and clumsily executed. The depth of degradation is reached in the two side-chapels (see for example Pl. LV). In the case of the sculptures in the second hall and inner rooms, often only the mere outlines were cut in the stone, the rest being moulded in plaster and the final details added in paint. Time, bats, and the hand of man, have wrought terrible havoc. The Osirid statues (see p. 4) that adorned the innermost line of columns in the first hall, and the group of seated divinities in the sanctuary, have been hacked away. The wind-driven sand has eaten into and destroyed beyond recognition most of the battle-scenes on the north wall of the roofless first hall, and greatly injured those on the south wall as well, and it has, of course, stripped off all the painted plaster⁽¹⁾. The west wall, and the west ends of the north and south walls, have been largely quarried away. The second hall and inner rooms have been disgustingly disfigured and blackened by the accumulated filth of generations of bats, which have only recently been routed out; their return has been prevented by the erection of a wire door.

THE FIRST PILLARED HALL.

(Pls. II-XXVII).

This hall is from 14 to 15 metres long and about 12 metres wide, and at the north and south-east corners, where portions of the ceiling are preserved, the height is from 4 m. 80 cent. to 5 metres. The roof was supported on twelve slightly tapering pillars of square section, standing on shallow rectangular bases and arranged in three rows of four. The pillars in the first two (outer) rows (nos. 1-8), of which only the lower parts remain (see Pls. II and III), are 1 metre square just above the basis. Those in the third row (nos. 9-12) are slightly larger, being about 1 m. 20 cent. square at the same place, and are adorned on the west face with colossal Osirid statues of Ramses II, now cut away above the knees. The architraves of this inner line of pillars, which are intact, have been carved out of the living rock, and so also was the roof between them and the east wall, as the surviving parts shew.

The north and south walls, being excavated in the cliff, could only be sculptured on the inside. On the north wall there is a much damaged battle-piece and a scene shewing the king offering two rows of captives to Re-Harakhte, while on the south wall there is the representation of some incidents in one of Ramses II's Nubian wars in a rather better state of preservation.

The entrance was in the west wall, but the doorway is completely destroyed, and the wall itself is, for the most part, almost level with the ground. The only portion of the wall that rises to any height is at the north end, and this bears on the inside traces of a chariot and horses. The outer face is so weathered and ruined that it is impossible to say whether it was decorated with reliefs or not.

The east wall, in the centre of which is the door that admits to the second pillared hall, is covered with representations of the king worshipping various divinities or sacrificing his prisoners before Re-Harakhte and Amon-Re.

Above these scenes is a frieze consisting of repetitions of the cartouche between two uraei⁽¹⁾, alternating with the name (See CHAMP., Notices,

I, 89; L., D., III, 184, a; and cf. Pl. XXV, 2).

North of the door of the second hall, forming a dado, eight⁽²⁾ of Ramses II's sons are depicted, marshalled in a line, and south of it is a corresponding company of nine daughters.

The space between scenes I and III is occupied by the architrave of pillar 9 and by the following inscription indicated by II in fig. 1 (see also Pl. V).

«Lord of the Two Lands Usermare-Setepnere, lord of diadems Ramses-Meriamon, beloved of Re-Harakhte the great god.»

SCENE IV (Pl. III; fig. 1).

Destroyed except for a few traces of figures  which seem to represent officers conducting bands of captives, but there is much uncertainty. Above the easternmost group is a horizontal line of quite illegible inscription.

SCENE V (Pl. IV; fig. 1).

Ramses in his chariot charges his foes who fly before him or lie prone beneath his prancing horses. This relief is unfortunately much damaged and the details are scarcely recognisable. It possibly commemorates one of Ramses' battles in Syria, corresponding to the similar scene on the south wall which depicts the king warring against the negroes⁽¹⁾.

SCENE VI (Pl. IV; fig. 1).

A very mutilated representation of the king  binding (?) four kneeling figures.

Ramses , his right hand extended in token thereof, presents prisoners of war, marshalled in two lines, to Re-Harakhte who is standing . The king holds his bow in his left hand and also the rope to which the captives are attached (2). Some of these unfortunates have their arms tightly bound behind their backs so that the elbows meet. The arms of the first man in the lower row are tied above his head while his hands dangle in front of his face. It is impossible to determine to what race the prisoners belong as their features are very weather-worn and almost obliterated. They do not seem, however, to be negroes. Probably, as has already been suggested, since the battle-scene on the south wall commemorates Ramses' Nubian war, the north wall was reserved for the representation of his campaign in Syria (3).

(1) Cf. second hall : south wall : scene II, j. p. 53.

(2) For a similar scene cf. L., D., III, 127, b.

(3) The prisoners in scene IV wear long skirts, a fact which lends further support to the idea of their being Asiatics.

(4) CHAMP., Notices, I, 88, reads , but BREASTED considers  to be the correct reading and refers to Stele of Thutmose III in PETRIE, Six Temples, I (see also BREASTED, Records, II, § 824).

ARCHAEOLOGICAL DETAILS :

The victims. Their faces, of which two are turned north and two south, present as in scene I three distinct racial types. Two of them are negroes, the third, who looks north, is an Asiatic with an aquiline nose and bushy beard, while the fourth, the central figure in the group, has a straight nose and wears a long spiral side-lock of hair. The clenched right fist of this fourth prisoner rests on his left thigh and his left arm is raised in supplication; over his right shoulder passes a band the lower end of which cannot be distinguished and was probably indicated in paint. It will be noted that only one arm of each of the other victims is shewn. Both negroes have a bracelet on their wrist.

The king. Head-dress no. 2 A(?).

Robe no. 7.

His quiver hangs down his back. He grasps the hair of his victims with his right hand and brandishes a  battle-axe in his left.

Amon-Re. Head-dress no. 11.

He doubtless held a  falchion in his, now destroyed, left hand (cf. scene I and L., D., III, 211).

This scene, forming the dado north of the door of the second hall, consists of a row of Ramses' sons. They were originally eight in number, but now only the inscriptions belonging to seven are left, and one figure has been almost, and another completely, destroyed. Each holds a  fan (see fig. 6), and his name and titles are written out in front of him.

Beginning from the south the inscriptions are as follows :

TEXT. 1. In two lines : ⁽¹⁾ ⁽²⁾ ⁽³⁾ « The hereditary prince, king's scribe, grand commander of the army, the king's eldest son of his body, whom he loves, Amenhirkhepeshef. »

2. In two lines : ⁽⁴⁾ ⁽⁵⁾ « King's scribe, grand commander-in-chief of the army of his majesty, king's son of his body, whom he loves, Ramses-si-neter. »

3. In two lines : ⁽⁶⁾ ⁽⁷⁾ ⁽⁸⁾ « King's son of his body, whom he loves, chief champion of the army, master of the horse, chief charioteer of his majesty, Perehirunamef. »

4. In a single line : ⁽⁹⁾ « King's son of his body, whom he loves, Khamwese. »

5. In a single line : ⁽¹⁰⁾ « King's son of his body Menthirkhepeshef. »

6. In a single line⁽¹¹⁾ : ⁽¹²⁾ « King's son of his body, whom he loves, Neb[nekhare]. »

7. The inscription is destroyed. Only the top of the fan and part of the right elbow and leg of the accompanying figure are preserved.

(1)  is preserved in L., D., loc. cit.

(2)  after — in L., D., loc. cit. is a mistake.

(3)  is omitted by CHAMP. and LEPSIUS, neither of whom indicate any lacuna.

In front of the king stands Amon-Re → broken away above the waist.

Published : Ros., Mon. Stor., LXXVIII, 1 (part only). CHAMP., Mon., XL, 1 (part only). For the text and description see CHAMP., Notices, I, 88.

This is a vivid, but unluckily much injured, representation of one of the battles in Ramses' Nubian war. In the western half of the scene — the part that has suffered most damage — there are two chariots ←, of the hindermost one of which only the wheels and parts of the horses are preserved. Beside the horses that draw this chariot is a man, destroyed above the waist, wearing apparently Egyptian clothes, and fighting on foot. Doubtless he is a hostile chieftain and is about to be smitten down by Ramses' brandished falchion⁽¹⁾. Underneath the feet of the king's prancing steeds we can with difficulty discern the forms of the fallen or flying enemy. Immediately behind this chariot are the legs and feet of people advancing in an opposite direction \rightarrow . One leg and foot are much larger than the others and no doubt belong to a destroyed representation of Ramses⁽²⁾ engaging in a hand-to-hand combat.

In the foremost chariot we see Ramses with bow bent shooting at his foemen who fly pell-mell before him or lie prostrate beneath the hoofs of his careering stallions⁽³⁾. Behind him are two Egyptian soldiers — much damaged — each armed with a large shield and spear⁽⁴⁾. Many of

Fig. 10.

of the fallen enemy are pierced with arrows, one of them having a shaft implanted in his forehead. Hard by him a negro in full flight, but still clutching his bow, has just turned his head, to see whether his pursuer has gained on him. He, like most of the negroes in the scene, is clad in a leopard skin, the legs and tail dangling about his legs (see figs. 9 and 10). Immediately in front of him two men are carrying a wounded comrade⁽⁵⁾ on their shoulders who lies face downwards with his arms hanging limp and helpless. He is supported underneath by the arm of one of his bearers, while below him walks a boy. The wounded man is also accompanied by two warriors armed with bows, one of whom walks at his head and the other at his feet. The latter breaks the news of the defeat to a woman who wails and tears her hair. Under the feet of this man there is a figure with hand on head in the attitude of mourning, crouching in front of a domed hut⁽⁶⁾.

⁽⁴⁾ The shields are slung on their backs; cf. L., D., III, 121 b and 155. Like the rest of the scene in ROSELLINI, loc. cit., the soldiers are intact. According to this authority they also held an axe in their right hands, but whether this was the case it is now impossible to say.

⁽⁶⁾ Or perhaps an oven?

Behind the hut(?) is a woman, bending over a child, who has evidently run to her for protection; of the latter only the legs and feet are preserved.

At the east end of the wall we have the representation of a pastoral country. Flocks of goats and cattle with their young gambolling around them⁽¹⁾, are to be seen grazing near a tree, in charge of a shepherd who leans upon a staff. Just opposite his face we can make out the figure of a small boy holding a bent stick and running forward. Behind the shepherd a negro clad in a leopard skin and armed with a bow, tells the tale of disaster to a wailing woman upon whose back is suspended a basket containing a baby (see fig. 11)⁽²⁾. The messenger is led into her presence by a naked child. The object behind the cow and skipping calf, with rounded top and an oval in the centre, may represent merely a small hillock, but, like the similarly shaped object already mentioned, it might be a domed hut or granary, or even an oven!

Under this pastoral scene and the group conveying the wounded man, is a row of prisoners moving $\rightarrow \rightarrow$ w and marshalled by three Egyptian officers, the foremost of whom carries a short staff. The hands of these poor wretches are bound either behind their backs or above their heads, or else crossed on the breast and tied at the wrists. The officers who wear a long side-lock of hair (fig. 12) are perhaps meant for sons of Ramses?

Fig. 12.

It is a great misfortune that such an interesting relief should be in so bad a state of preservation, due more to the ravages of time and the poor quality of the sandstone than to acts of vandalism. The style though somewhat rough is full of life and vigour. The wounded man and his bearers represented so unconventionally, the messenger with his bad news, the running children, the wailing woman, the shepherd leaning on his staff, and the sportive kids and calves, are motives not usually found in the ordinary run of Egyptian battle-scenes. For such naturalistic touches where the artist has given rein to his imagination, we might compare the humorous figure of the king of Aleppo who, after being rescued from drowning in the Orontes, into which he has been driven by the victorious onslaught of Ramses, is held upside down by his soldiers in order that he may disgorge the water he has swallowed⁽¹⁾.

THE SECOND PILLARED HALL.

(Pls. XXVIII-LIV).

The jambs and architrave of the door leading from the first into the second hall are almost entirely destroyed. The scraps still remaining on the west face⁽²⁾ shew that they were decorated with scenes representing the king offering to, or adoring, divinities. There were no such decorations on the inner (east) face, for the scenes on the west wall of the second hall extend to the edge of the doorway. There are traces of figures however on the north and south thickness of the door, but too much destroyed to make anything of. This hall measures about 12 metres \times 13 metres. The height is from 4 m. 80 cent. to 5 metres.

The roof is supported on six slightly tapering pillars of square section (like those in the first hall), standing on square bases (Pl. XXVIII, 2). They are about 1 m. 40 cent. square at the base and 1 m. 20 cent. square at the top. The bases themselves are roughly 1 m. 80 cent. to 2 metres square and 0 m. 40 cent. in height. The roof was covered with stucco and painted. In the central aisle the decoration consists of vultures, with wings outspread, holding a ring and fan in the talons of each foot. The birds are separated from one another by the cartouches of Ramses II. Most of the stucco has fallen, and what remains is at the east end of the hall. The colouring, except for some traces of red, has disappeared and all details have been obscured and blackened by the bats. In the side aisles the ceiling has in many places collapsed, and no traces of the decoration remain.

Below the ceiling on all four walls there is a frieze, broken only by the architraves of the pillars and the door of the sanctuary. It consists of repetitions of the cartouche  between uræi and the name  (Pl. XXV, 2).

This hall, the sanctuary, and the two side-chapels are entirely excavated in the rock. The workmanship is very inaccurate and there are no really straight lines or right-angles any where. There is quite a marked curve in the north line of pillars which clearly shows in the photograph (Pl. XXVIII, 1). The sculpture in these four inner chambers is very poor. The subjects were only roughly cut in the stone and then finished off in stucco, though even so there are but few details, these having doubtless been added afterwards in paint. But the scenes have been so blackened by the bats that the colours have entirely disappeared, except for a few unimportant traces on some of the pillars. It was thus, as can well be imagined, practically impossible to note more than the mere outlines of the costumes and other accessories. The work however is so coarse that there probably never was much detail of archaeological interest. Owing to the dirty state of the sculptures and also to the natural darkness of these chambers, it was very difficult to obtain satisfactory photographs; moreover no light could enter except through the one door. All photographs, therefore, were taken by reflected light introduced by large plate-glass mirrors, of which as many as four were sometimes employed simultaneously.

THE PILLARS.

(Pls. XLV-LIV).

As we have said on p. 41 the hall is divided into three aisles by two rows of pillars (see plan, Pl. I). Fig. 28 shews the way in which the pillars and architraves are decorated.

Fig. 28. — a. Band of inscription on architrave; b. Frieze above scene; c. Scene. Scale 1 : 100.

On all four sides of each pillar there is a frieze b, of the same design as that on the walls (Pl. XLVIII, 3 and cf. Pl. XXV, 2), and a scene c depicting Ramses with a deity. Along both the north and south faces of the architraves of the northern row of pillars there is continuous line of inscription a. Only the north face of the architraves of the southern row is thus decorated; the southern face is blank.

The under-faces of the architraves between the pillars are also decorated with the names or attributes of Ramses II.

Owing to the narrow space between the pillars and the north and south walls it was impossible to make satisfactory photographs of the north faces of the northern row of pillars, or of the south faces of the southern row.

c. Immediately in front of b in two lines :
«Offering incense and libation, wine, milk, everything good and pure, unto the king's ka ⁽²⁾.»

⁽²⁾ That Ramses should make offering to and adore his ka is by no means surprising in the light of certain passages in the Pyramid Texts, which have been fully discussed by BREASTED in his recently published book, Development of Religion and Thought in Ancient Egypt, p. 52-55, and by STEINDORFF, in Ä.Z., 48, 152. These authorities have clearly shewn that the ka was par excellence a protecting genius (Schutzgottheit) who might be addressed in prayer as a god (Pyr. § 63). Thus in L., D., III, 34, b the figure of Thutmose III's ka, who embraces that king, is as large as that of the god Amon, with whom he is associated on terms of practical equality (see STEINDORFF's remarks on this scene in Ä.Z., 48, 158). There is a similarly large representation of Amenophis III's ka in L., D., 78, e, and of that of king Eye in L., D., III, 113, a. The divine rank of the ka is further illustrated by the formulae that often accompany him, such, for example, as  (L., D., III, 113, a);  (L., D., III, 21); see also L., D., III, 20, a.

Since Ramses is offering libation and incense to the «king's ka» in front of a boat-shrine, we

d. In front of Ramses in two lines :  "Offering incense and a libation to his father."

He holds the usual -censer in his left hand, and in his right a -vase for libation from which the liquid issues in two streams on to a -shaped offering-stand.

The boat-shrine. The boat is quite usual and almost exactly like that in scene I : north wall. By the stern stand two tall fans, one -and the other -shaped. At the bows is a large -flabella. Beyond the bows, but with the stalks resting on the carrying-poles, are three lotus flowers.

In front of the prow of the boat is a -table upon which lie -cakes of bread, -joints (?), baskets of fruit (?), and a small bouquet of lotus-flowers (cf. fig. 57, p. 93). Next to this, under the bows, is a -offering-slab on a -stand.

On either side of the pedestal which supports the boat is a -table. Upon the one on the west side are arranged four vases, shaped like canopic jars, with lids in the form of a hawk's head crowned with a disc (cf. fig. 58, p. 93). Upon the one on the east side are two -vases containing ointment and four -vases. Next to this table is a lath rack supporting a -shaped bowl containing -cakes of bread, a -joint and other provisions. Immediately behind it is a tall -bouquet of lotus-flowers.

THE FRIEZE (Fig. 60).

The frieze on the south as on the north wall, consists of a continuous line of inscription :  "Live the good god! (Live) may presume that the shrine contains an image of the ka, a thing not altogether unknown. Dr MORGAN found a wooden statue of the ka of king Hor in that monarch's tomb at Dahshûr (see STEINDORFF, Ä. Z., 48, 158).

(1) The sign faces  W.

Horus, strong bull, beloved of Mat, belonging to the two Crown-Goddesses, protecting Egypt, binding the foreign countries, Horus over the Ombite, strong of years, great of victories, king of Upper and Lower Egypt Usermare-Setepnere, son of Re Meriamon-Ramses, given life!"

The West Wall.

The space on either side of the door is very limited.

THE NORTH SIDE (Pl. LXIV, 2; fig. 61, N).

Ramses ← stands holding a -vase for libation(?) (broken away) in his right hand and a -shaped object in his left.

TEXT. Behind Ramses :  «Protection, life!»

Above Ramses : ←     «Lord of the Two Lands Usermare-Setepnere, lord of diadems Meriamon-Ramses.»

Robe no. 4 A.

According to the little sketch in CHAMP., Notices, I, 94, the king is ; but as the photograph plainly shews he is not holding a staff. The  is much longer than the usual napkin or handkerchief⁽¹⁾, and looks more like the ceremonial brush held by the lector during part of the funeral rites (see NEWBERRY, Beni Hasan, I, XVII).

THE SOUTH SIDE (Pl. LXIV, 1; fig. 61, S).

Published : see CHAMP., Notices, I, 94.

The Frieze.

NORTH OF THE DOOR (Fig. 61).

In a horizontal line : \leftarrow  " beloved of Mut lady of heaven."

SOUTH OF THE DOOR (Fig. 61).

In a horizontal line : \rightarrow   " Usermare-Setepnere, beloved of Amon-Re lord of Karnak."

The architrave of the door is broken away (see fig. 61).

The Ceiling.

Down the whole central length of the ceiling there was a band of inscription of which only the eastern half is now preserved :

"All life, stability, and happiness! All health! All joy! Horus, strong bull, beloved of truth, protecting Egypt" (banquets); et passim). It is perhaps worth mentioning in this connection that it is a common custom among the modern Egyptian peasantry for the men, on gala days such as el-'Id el-Kebir, to carry a handkerchief in their hand. This they do out of doors as well as in the mandara.
